The Mayor then put some questions to Messis. Le Brun and Kendail.

"In your selection of the six best plans were you guided by the expense the plan would involve, or solely by its merit?" he asked.

"Solely by merit," replied Mr. Kendail, "The estimates of the cost of the buildings designed by the premium winners are from $6,000,000 to $13,000,000. My own opinion is that a building in accordance with the designs submitted could be put up for from $7,000,000 to $3,000,000." Mayor Gilroy said the report of the Advisory Committee was unsatisfactory to him, and the probability was that plans would have to be readvertised for. He saw no other way out of the muddle. An adjournment was taken for two weeks. Meantime action to be taken at that meeting will be agreed upon.

The dying man in his ante-mortem statement tells an entirely different story from the policeman. His statement was taken by Coroner Fitzpatrick this morning. In it Casper said:

"Last night I was in company with Joe Casey and Jim Coloran and a man named Love. We were in a shoe store drinking beer. We went to sleep. I woke up and went cut to sleep in a hall-way near the pool-room.

"Here the blast of a whistle woke me up. I went into the street, and met officer Gardner, who had arrested me before.

Telskan was received by Warden Fallon at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and assigned to a cell in the first tier of the old prison. His clothing was thoroughly searched, his shoes taken off and examined, and his stockinged feet felt for a conceiled weapon, but nothing was discovered.

This morning at 7.30 o'clock Telskan failed to turn out to exercise with the other prisoners, in a twenty minutes' walk about the corridor. Keepers Skelly and Kiernan went to his cell and told him that he must conform to the prison rules and turn out for exercise, providing he was able.

"I'm too sick to walk this morning," replied the man; 'besides, I want to be alone for a while longer.'

The keepers noticed that the man's face was ashen pale and that he was evidently in deep distress.
